New Florodoras Coached by One of the Originals

Sextet Gets Lesson in Deportment as They Assemble for Rehearsal.

A class in how to study for a wealthy husband was started at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre yesterday, with all the pupils present and eager. The Messrs. Shubert prepared for their forthcoming revival of "Florodora" by giving the first course in methods whereby a sextette girl can prove worthy of a man of position who can express his devotion in seven figures.

Of course the girls in the present sextette, who are all under 20, are bound by contract not to marry during the run, but the management is making ready for the unexpected, and in view of the matrimonial achievements of the original six desired this new set to measure up to the best standards set by a modern husband in case such good fortune should be theirs. So they had the opening lecture delivered by Mrs. Albert Stokes of 771 West End avenue, who as Marjorie Welles was one of the first cast of the original sextette.

Mrs. Stokes was married to William David Holmes, who is now dead, so with her second marriage she comes naturally to the knowledge of how to be a fit helpmeet of a prize husband. Moreover, she has kept her beauty very well.

To gather her pearls of wisdom, the class girls of the newly completed sextette—eight were chosen to each, one alternate and give to each, one night a week for resting her curls—were called from their morning slumber, if not in their nightgowns, to the stage by Mrs. Stokes, who is a very capable and efficient actress.

The marriage of Miss Ethel Louise O'Donohue, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph O'Donohue, Jr., to Mr. Alwyn Hall 2d, will take place June 2 in the LXVI suite of the St. Regis.

The Misses Loring will leave Friday morning for the latter part of this month for their usual stay in Aiken, Justice and Mrs. William Caleb Loring still are in Bermuda.

"Well," admitted Mrs. Stokes, "I don't think they're quite so pretty, perhaps because they have to worry about an income tax."

At the point the human interest note was injected by William J. McDonald, vice-president of the Wendell P. Colton Company, who dropped in to see if any one remembered his sister, Miss Nellie McDonald, who was the original "Florodora" chorus against her father's wishes and has not been heard of by her family since the original road tour ended. He said her father's estate is tied up until she appears. Mrs. Stokes could not remember the girl.

Then Miss Flamm managed to drag the camera men in by their tripods, and Mrs. Stokes and the girls were lined up against the wall and shot. They were all adjourned to sample the Adjutant's lily cups.
